MEMORANDUM FOR THE HONORABLE GEORGE P. SHULTZ
The Secretary of State

SUBJECT: Follow-up on the President's Bogota Speech --
Advanced Developing Countries

In his speech in Bogota, the President said:

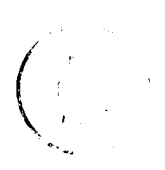

"In cooperating to help others, we should be careful not to neglect cooperation to benefit our own societies. Could we not do more to mobilize resources and encourage efforts by public-private institutions (universities, institutes, voluntary agencies and businesses) to increase their cooperation for development? Many scientific, educational and other institutions in the U.S. and in Colombia have had close working relationships in the past. We must strengthen and renew such ties and promote new links, to accelerate the pace and quality of research and development on the most pressing problems in this hemisphere."

We need to follow-up on these remarks.

AID developed this concept for the speech and is the appropriate agency to develop U.S. Government strategy to follow through on the President's comment. Once a strategy is developed, each agency will, of course, direct its own part of the effort.

Accordingly, by February 15, 1983, we need a proposal for following up on the above-quoted portion of the President's Bogota speech. The strategy should be coordinated by AID with other agencies which are, I understand, presently independently carrying out activities in a number of the Advanced Developing Countries.

We should confine our thinking to Latin America and the Caribbean. We need to know which countries, specifically, you think might be most appropriate for this sort of approach (Colombia obviously is one) and how you would propose to go about putting these programs together, keeping in mind the extraordinary budget stringency under which all of our programs work. We also need your thoughts on how we should handle the media on this topic.
